LET'S PLAY!

CV ↗ Portfolio ↗ LinkedIn ↗

WHAT I CAN BRING

Music partnerships that grow LEGO's cultural relevance and revenue with 18 to 30 year olds.

LEGO grew 21% in H1 2026 on culturally relevant brand experiences. Music can be the next one.

Caroline Kelly · Data analyst, brand partnerships · MSc Business Analytics, UCL · October 2026

Music is a growing market, and its fans are the young people LEGO wants to reach.

54–57%

of the fans of the artists Luminate profiled are under 35 (Luminate, 2025)

37%

of US Gen Z go to two or more gigs a year, up from 29% in 2024 (Luminate, 2026)

73%

of Gen Z fans find new content on social media (Deloitte, 2026)

2.8×

the value of brands high in cultural relevance against the rest (CultureLab, 2026)

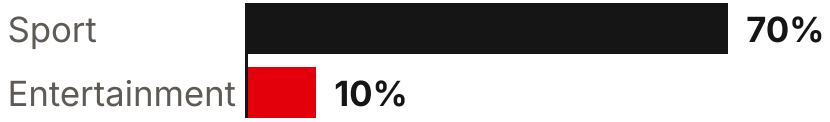

The music market nearly doubles in ten years

What it means: music is a big, growing market to be part of, not a niche.

Global music market, Goldman Sachs (2026). PwC's more cautious forecast still grows, to $145.8bn by 2030.

Yet sponsorship money still goes to sport

What it means: sport is crowded and getting dearer, while music has room for a brand to stand out.

Share of North American sponsorship, 2018, the latest public split (ESP). F1 sponsorship rose another 22.1% in 2025 (SponsorUnited).

Method: I read and compared reports from Goldman Sachs, PwC, Deloitte, Luminate, CultureLab, ESP and SponsorUnited.

Music is what people remember, and it moves both songs and sales.

When people remember the Cadbury advert, it's Phil Collins on the drums. Music sticks in the memory and makes people act, as these two moments show.

CADBURY'S GORILLA AD, 2007

76% still knew it was Cadbury eleven years later

A gorilla drums to Phil Collins' In the Air Tonight, with no chocolate shown. Dairy Milk sales turned around:

What it means: the music made the brand memorable, and sales followed.

▶ Watch the ad ↗

Recall: Marketing Week, 2018. Sales: Cadbury's IPA entry, 2008.

JADE AT THE VICTORIA'S SECRET SHOW, 2026

2,049% jump in her US Spotify streams

Jade, formerly of Little Mix, released Angel of My Dreams in 2024. Kylie Jenner walked to it on 18 Oct 2026, and daily streams kept climbing:

What it means: a song placed in the right moment reaches a new audience, and a LEGO ad can be that moment.

Spotify's Anthony Langone on LinkedIn, via NYLON, 2026. Daily streams: Kworb.

37% would buy from a brand backing a musician they like, against 24% for other stars (Harris Poll, 2021)

71–78% would try a product backed by a well-matched artist (Luminate, 2025)

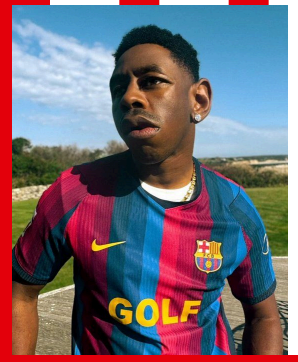

Music goes across every part of culture, from fashion and art to food and drink, and its reach is global.

Method: each figure checked at source on 22 and 23 Oct 2026, the 2,049% against Kworb's chart data. Cadbury's results are self-reported.

Brands that matter in culture are worth 2.8 times the rest. LEGO built its culture through play, and music can grow it.

2.8×

value of brands high in cultural relevance (CultureLab, 2026)

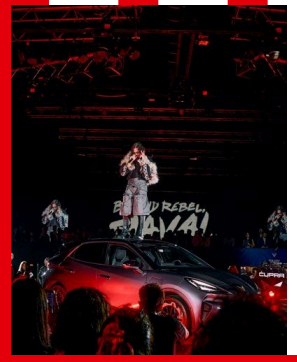

Spotify × Barça × Tyler, the Creator

Spotify gives its El Clásico shirt slot to an artist. Tyler is the ninth (Inside World Football, 2026).

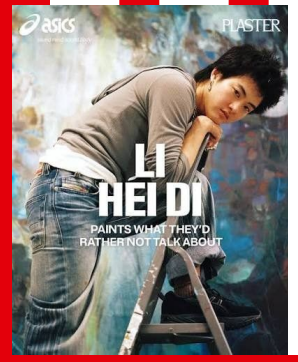

Levi's, Behind Every Original

Ambassadors across music, film and style since a Super Bowl launch in 2026. Levi's worked with LEGO in 2022.

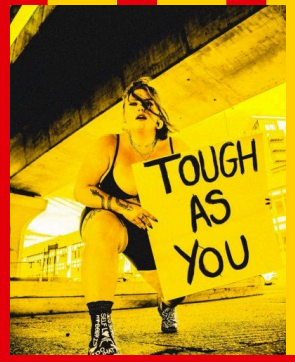

CUPRA City Garage Manchester

A music and culture hub with 200+ events in its first year and a stage for local acts (Manchester's Finest, 2026).

ASICS × Plaster

Plaster, a youth art magazine, tells the ASICS story through painter Li Hei Di's own creative practice.

Dr. Martens, Tough As You

A global campaign since 2019 fronted by real creatives, including musicians Blaine and Nakhane (Decision Marketing, 2019).

Red Bull Music Academy

Twenty-one years of workshops and lectures, 1998 to 2019, with alumni including Flying Lotus and Nina Kraviz (Rolling Stone, 2019).

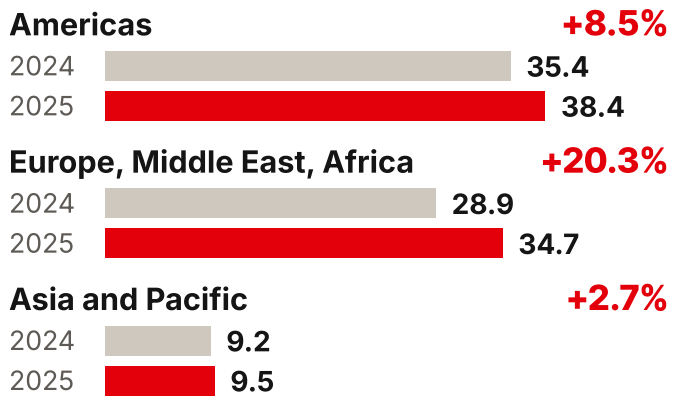

Why these: each brand backs the people making culture, not just its logo, and each keeps the brand culturally relevant.

LEGO's growth is in the Americas and Europe, and music already reaches fans there, online and on tour.

CHART 1

LEGO is growing fastest in Europe and the Americas

Sale of goods by region, DKK bn, and growth 2024 to 2025

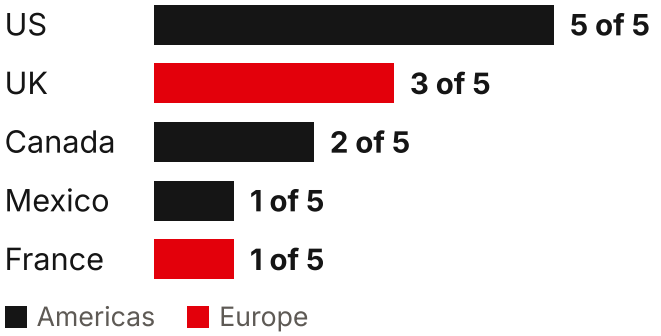

The Americas are 46.5% of LEGO's sales.

CHART 2

Music fans sit in those same markets

How many of five Beggars acts have each country in their YouTube top three, Sept to Oct 2026

Outside them: Indonesia, Algeria and Libya, one act each.

So what for LEGO

1. Music already reaches the US and UK, LEGO's biggest markets.
2. It is global and local at once: worldwide online, and a new face-to-face crowd every night on tour. Only about 10% of Brentford's fans are abroad (BU survey, 2026).
3. China was "the exception" to LEGO's growth (CEO, Yicai, 2026), and I have no artist data there.

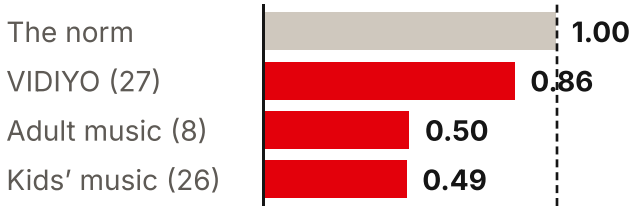

Method: regions from LEGO's Annual Report 2025 (p. 51), growth in kroner so it includes currency. Top countries by monthly YouTube views from Chartmetric, 16 Sept to 16 Oct 2026, so illustrative, not a LEGO-buyer overlap (notebook 05).

Music can open a new audience for LEGO: the adult fans it wants are growing fast, and sets alone haven't reached them yet.

FINDING 1

Sets alone haven't unlocked music fans yet

Collector interest, 1.0 = the norm for sets of the same age band and year

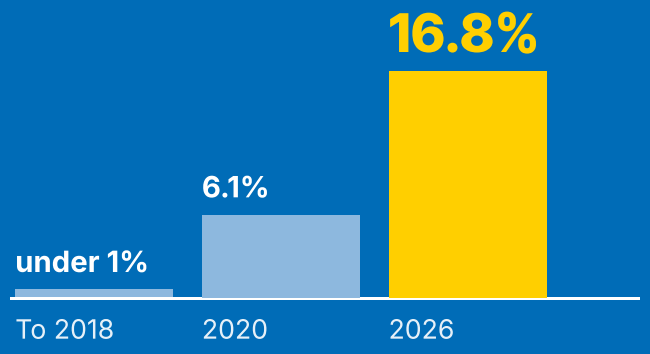

Music sets get about half the usual interest. VIDIYO, made with Universal Music for younger children, was withdrawn within a year (Brick Fanatics, 2022).

FINDING 2

Adult sets went from under 1% to one in six

Share of sets rated 16+ or 18+

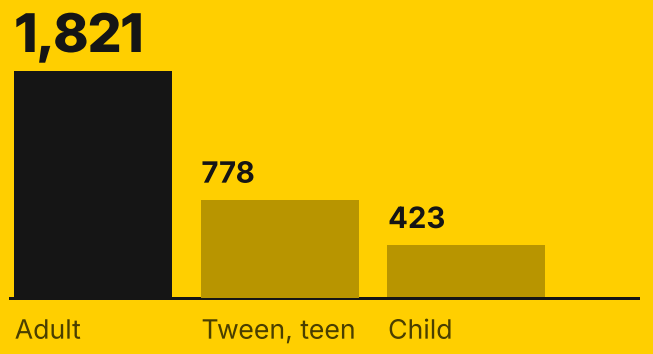

LEGO for Adults launched in 2020.

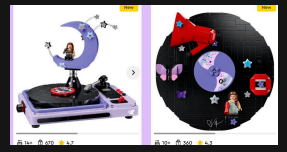

FINDING 3

Adult sets draw four times the interest of children's

Median owners per year, by age band

Owners per year is a demand proxy, not sales.

What it means: music is a new audience LEGO hasn't reached yet, and live is the way in. 37% of US Gen Z go to two or more gigs a year (Luminate, 2026), so a music set launched with a live activation behind it gives fans the music itself, not just a box.

Method: Brickset API v3 pulled in Python, 14,298 sets from 2010 to 2026, raw file unedited, 80/20 split by set (seed 42), music sets keyword-flagged and 13 false positives removed by hand (notebook 02).

F1 is crowded with sponsors. Music reaches the 18 to 30s LEGO wants with far fewer in the way, and my data shows its fans are loyal.

Case study: Beggars Group (XL, 4AD, Rough Trade, Matador, Young), 53 acts against 20 on majors and other labels, from APIs and public data. The same method works for any label.

F1 IS A CROWDED FIELD

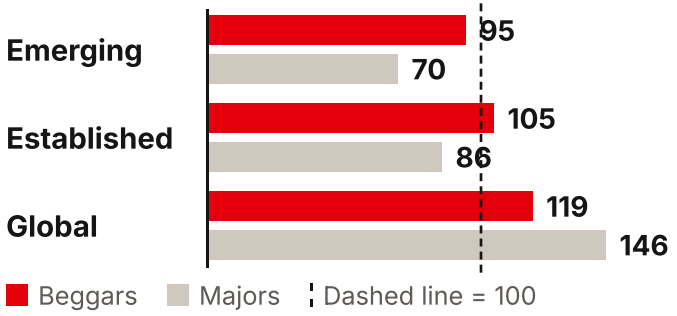

382 F1 team sponsor deals in 2025 (SponsorUnited)

Against about 4 brand deals each for the 200 most-followed artists (SponsorUnited, 2023 to 2024). LEGO already partners F1, so it knows that field.

FINDING 1

Beggars fans are more loyal at emerging and established level

Loyalty: how many listeners go on to follow an act, against acts of its size. 100 = the typical act.

At global level the majors lead.

FINDING 2

But they aren't growing faster

Spotify follower growth over the 30 days to 15 Oct 2026

Growth is where a LEGO partnership comes in.

What it means: LEGO would reach a loyal 18 to 30 audience with fewer sponsors in the way, and the programme itself can bring the growth.

Method: Chartmetric pages for 73 acts, 15 and 21 Oct 2026, parsed in Python; loyalty indexed to the peer median (notebook 03).

One idea: in Let's Play!, young people make music, play it live, and the best of it scores a LEGO ad.

1 Make it

LEGO funds Roundhouse studio time for 18 to 30 year olds. The Roundhouse worked with 11,403 young people in 2024/25.

2 Show it

LEGO funds a showcase on the Roundhouse stage, curated with Beggars artists and staff as mentors.

3 Share it

A song from the programme is licensed for a LEGO ad with a proper sync fee, and the artist keeps their rights.

What it costs, and what's still missing

Input	What I know
LEGO marketing, 2025	DKK 10,151m, up 8.3%
Sport's price of a fan	£2.16 (Brentford shirt ÷ fans)
Fund for 10 acts	£30k to £80k at 2026 grant sizes
Roundhouse cost, sync fee	Missing, so not estimated

How I'd measure it

- Who took part and who watched, by age and background.
- Artists' followers, loyalty and listeners by country, before and after, against 20 comparator acts.
- Brand awareness among 18 to 30s in the Americas and Europe.

Method: costs are scenarios from sourced inputs only, with the working shown in notebook 06. Sources: Roundhouse Annual Review 2024/25, LEGO Annual Report 2025 (note 2.2, p. 52), SalaryLeaks 2025/26, Stadium Maps via Hyperset 2026, Dazed and Music Week 2026.

I built the analysis in this deck myself, and I'd bring that rigour to LEGO's team.

Analysis	Method	Data and API	Checks
LEGO product data	Owners per year against the median of the same age band and year, 80/20 split, seed 42	Brickset API v3 (getSets), 14,298 sets, Python	Raw pull never edited, 13 false positives removed
Fan loyalty and growth	Log-log residual, peer-median index, 30-day growth, r = −0.48, 500 weightings	Chartmetric pages for 73 acts, Spotify Web API	Two snapshots, labels re-checked, 11 tests pass
Key markets	Regional growth, artists' top countries mapped to LEGO's regions	LEGO Annual Report 2025, Chartmetric YouTube	Nine acts, so shown as illustrative
Market and value	Industry reports read and compared, price per fan and per act	Goldman Sachs, PwC, Deloitte, Luminate, CultureLab, SponsorUnited, IEG	Every figure with its year, gaps left as gaps

Why me, in three points

1 I build models brands use.
At Atlassian Williams Racing my partner model scores 13,296 companies weekly. The top 10% of scores held 84% of future sponsors.

2 I know music audiences.
My portfolio has fan segmentation across Reddit, YouTube, Spotify and Last.fm, and a weekly artist momentum score from 16 music publications.

3 I know the room.
I've worked as artist liaison at the Attitude Awards at the Roundhouse.

Workflow: Hands-On Machine Learning project checklist, raw data never edited, every row sourced and dated, and tests run before notebooks, in Python in VS Code.

From my data and what I know of the culture, LEGO and music is a unique pairing worth taking.

01

What's happening now

Music is a $112.5bn market heading for $198.1bn by 2035 (Goldman Sachs, 2026).

LEGO grew 21% in H1 2026 on "culturally relevant brand experiences".

02

The gaps I see

No play brand has a real place in music, so LEGO can own it. LEGO is about play, and so is music.

LEGO hasn't found the right way into music yet: sets alone draw half the usual interest, so a live, artist-led approach is the opening.

03

How I'd fill them

A bespoke programme built with LEGO for commercial growth, with Let's Play! as one example.

Measured before and after with my loyalty, growth and geography tracking.

WHAT I OFFER LEGO

I'm passionate about music and culture, and driven to bring them together with LEGO and keep it culturally relevant, with the data to show it's working.

Let me help on your next music partnership.

I'm passionate | I'm enthusiastic | I decide with data

CV ↗

Portfolio ↗

LinkedIn ↗

Caroline Kelly · carolinekelly1251@gmail.com